Advocacy Inside

Our advocates work alongside people with disability who are in custody in Queensland prisons to ensure their rights are respected and their disability support needs are understood and considered.

We help people access disability supports in custody and as they transition back into the community, guided by lived experience, human rights and trauma-informed practice.

What we do

- Advocate for your rights while in custody.
- Help you communicate your disability support and communication needs.
- Support you to access disability supports and services, including the NDIS where appropriate.
- Work with correctional staff, disability providers and community services to coordinate supports and where appropriate, assist with planning for release
- Help connect people with housing, health, disability and community services where needed.
- Provide information so you can understand your options and make informed decisions.

Who we assist

People with disability in Queensland prisons.

All our services are free, confidential, independent and non-legal. We are not lawyers and cannot provide legal advice.

Contact us

1300 130 582 (free)

07 3844 4200

qai@qai.org.au

www.qai.org.au

qai
Queensland Advocacy for Inclusion

This service is funded by the Queensland Mental Health Commission.